Welcome to The Democracy Pavilion

We are currently celebrating the seventieth anniversary of the establishment of Israel.

The State of Israel was erected on the foundations of the autonomous institutions set up by the Jewish pioneers and the settlements they built, and on the basis of the broad international recognition of the Jewish people's right to their own nation-state in the Land of Israel.

The Declaration of Independence, composed while the Jews of Eretz Israel were under bloody attack, transcended the time and place of its creation, with words that defined Israel as a Jewish and democratic state. Its promise that Israel would guarantee equality and freedom to all its citizens, and its call for partnership with its Arab residents and peace with the neighboring Arab states, remain valid today.

In its seventy years, Israel has faced many difficult challenges, while registering impressive achievements. The events that have shaped our society are a testament both to the fragility of Israeli democracy and to its strength. Uniquely, Israeli democracy draws both on the universal democratic heritage of freedom and equality, and on the Jewish humanistic tradition that evokes such values as "love your fellow as yourself." Among other sources, it is our dual Jewish and democratic heritage that has produced an "Israeliness" that combines perseverance, power, creativity, daring, cheek, compassion, and fraternity.

As we mark this seventieth anniversary, we must remind ourselves that it is up to each and every one of us, the citizens of Israel, to protect our democracy and ensure that it does not turn into a hollow shell, with democratic institutions and processes for appearances only. Only a genuine, substantive democracy—one with a deep commitment to the principles of equality and freedom, respect for human dignity, and tolerance of others—will be able to cope with the tensions within Israeli society, with the challenges at home and abroad, with the threats posed by terrorism, war, poverty, and hatred.

Democracy and all of its institutions, including the Knesset and the Supreme Court, whose role is to enable the realization of democratic principles, are the glue that holds us together in a society that is greater than the sum of its parts. If we protect our democracy it will protect us; if we safeguard our democracy, it will enable us to prosper as free and equal citizens in a Jewish nation-state.

I hope that the experience of the Democracy Pavilion will bolster our faith in the fortitude of our democracy, while reinforcing our commitment to ensuring its future. May we continue to draw on the strengths of our Jewish and democratic legacy to confront the challenges that lie ahead.

The Electoral Reversal

After almost three decades of rule by Mapai (and its successor, the Labor Party/Alignment), the Likud party, led by Menachem Begin, staged a historic upset in the 1977 elections. The peaceful transition of power between parties that were vehemently opposed to one another was a major test of Israeli democracy, and by all standards it passed with flying colors, setting an important precedent for the future.

1977

President Sadat of Egypt Comes to Israel

In November 1977, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat made a historic three-day visit to Israel, during which he spoke from the Knesset rostrum: "We accept to live with you in permanent peace based on justice. We do not want to encircle you or be encircled ourselves by destructive missiles ready for launching, nor by the shells of grudges and hatred." Sadat's visit opened a new chapter in the history of the conflict between Israel and its neighbors. Sadat's official visit to Israel, the first by an Arab leader, was a turning point in a process that led to the conclusion of a peace treaty between the two countries in 1979, and the evacuation and return of the Sinai Peninsula to Egypt in 1983.

The Disqualification of Meir Kahane

The disqualification of electoral lists is one of the sharpest manifestations of the tension between the right of every citizen to run for political office and the need to defend other fundamental rights against those who would subvert them. In 1984, the Central Elections Commission rejected the Kach list, headed by Meir Kahane, on account of its racist platform. However, the High Court of Justice overruled the Commission on the grounds that it had exceeded its statutory authority. As a result, Kahane ran and won a seat in the Knesset. Four years later, after the Knesset had amended the "Basic Law: The Knesset" to bar racist parties, Kahane was disqualified again; this time the Court upheld the Commission's decision. In 2002, the law was amended again to permit the disqualification of parties or individual candidates who support armed struggle against the State of Israel. Since then, there have been several attempts to invoke this clause and bar Arab lists and candidates from running for the Knesset, but all of them have been overturned by the Court.

1984-1995

Aliya: Operation Moses, Operation Solomon, and the Exodus of Soviet Jewry

In 1984 and again in 1991 the Israeli government carried out two dramatic operations to airlift thousands of Ethiopian Jews to Israel. In parallel, the Cold War drew to a close and the Soviet Union collapsed. Starting in 1990, a tidal wave of more than one million Jews made aliya from the Soviet Union and its successor states. This was a supreme test of the country's commitment to absorb immigrants and its ability to integrate them into the fabric of Israeli life. Aliya is the outstanding expression of the vision of the ingathering of the exiles.

1995

The Assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin

The political process between Israel and the Palestinians, the Knesset's approval of the Oslo Accords, and the wave of suicide terror attacks in 1994 and 1995 produced severe polarization between Israelis on the right and Israelis on the left. Right wing opponents of the government blamed its policies for exposing Israel to terrorism and endangering the state's existence. They launched an aggressive public campaign, claiming that the Government had forfeited its legitimacy. At some of these protests, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was denounced as a "traitor." The campaign of incitement against Rabin reached a new high in the autumn of 1995, after the signing of the "Oslo 2" agreement. On November 4th, at the conclusion of a peace rally in what was then called Kings of Israel Square in Tel Aviv, Rabin was shot dead by a Jewish assassin. The assassination traumatized the nation, and served as an illustration of the danger of civil strife and the importance of unifying around core values.

1995

The Alice Miller Case

The ruling by the High Court of Justice on Alice Miller's petition that she be allowed to apply for the Israel Air Force pilot's course is considered to be one of its most important decisions to date. It was a precedent-setting statement that discrimination against women is illegal. In advance of her conscription, Miller, a member of the academic reserve, had asked to be considered for admission to the elite pilot's course. Her request was denied on the grounds that standing orders barred women from combat roles. With assistance from the Association for Civil Rights and the Israel Women's Network, Miller petitioned the High Court. The Court ruled in her favor on the basis of the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, enacted in 1992, arguing that "human dignity" includes the right to equal treatment. The ruling paved the way for women to serve in many positions from which they had previously been barred. In 2000, the law was amended to stipulate that every woman has an equal right to serve in any position in the Israel Defense Forces, unless a concrete limitation is justified by the nature of the position.

The October 2000 Riots and the Orr Commission Report

In October 2000, some of the country's Arab citizens joined the Palestinians in Judea and Samaria in violent demonstrations to express their disappointment with the political process and anger over the visit to the Temple Mount by the then-leader of the Likud opposition, Ariel Sharon. Over a span of ten days there were violent protests in which twelve Israeli Arab citizens were killed by police gunfire. A State Commission of Inquiry, headed by Supreme Court Justice Theodore Orr, was appointed to look into these events and their causes. Its report (published in 2003) stated that the violence had erupted in part as a result of persistent discrimination against the Arab sector and its continued neglect by successive Israeli governments. The Commission also blamed inflammatory statements by leaders of the Arab-Israeli community for fanning the flames of violence. It recommended major efforts to reduce the disparities between the Jewish and Arab sectors. The publication of the Commission's report, along with the High Court's ruling in 2000 that the policy of leasing State land exclusively to Jews was discriminatory and illegal, contributed to ongoing efforts to reduce inequality between the state's Arab and Jewish citizens.

The Disengagement

Prime Minister Ariel Sharon decided to evacuate all the Israeli settlements in the Gaza Strip and a handful of settlements in northern Samaria. The plan was implemented in August-September 2005, after a heated political debate. The fierce public protests against the plan raised fears of civil war. There were also concerns that soldiers affiliated with the National Religious camp would refuse to follow orders. Nevertheless, the plan was carried out smoothly and without major incidents of violence or insubordination.

The Funeral of Rabbi Ovadiah Yosef

Rabbi Ovadiah Yossef's funeral, the largest in the country's history, came to be called the "Million-Man Funeral." Rabbi Yossef was the preeminent Sephardi religious authority of his generation. He had served as Chief Rabbi of Israel and was the founder and spiritual mentor of the Shas party. His death was a major blow to many. The funeral attracted mourners from all sectors of Jewish-Israeli society—including ultra-Orthodox, National Religious, and traditional Jews.

The Tribes of Israel Speech

In a landmark speech to the nation, President Reuven Rivlin warned that demographic trends and deepening social divides were causing Israeli society to disintegrate into four separate tribes: the ultra-Orthodox, the Arabs, the National Religious, and secular Jews. Rivlin called on Israelis to build a unified society on the basis of equality, respect for human dignity, and a shared sense of responsibility.

The Social Protests

The summer of 2011 was dominated by a series of demonstrations across the country. The social protests, which began on Facebook, focused on the exorbitant level of rents and the high cost of living in general. Protesters erected hundreds of tents on Rothschild Boulevard in Tel Aviv, and then in other towns as well. In response, the Government appointed the Trajtenberg Committee to study the situation and propose ways to address the protesters' economic demands, especially the high cost of living in Israel, and the expanding social gaps. Some view the protests as an important turning point in the public mood: after a long period of apathy and escapism, the demonstrations expressed a renewed belief in the average citizen's ability to influence public affairs.

Select passages from the Declaration of Independence followed by quotes from eminent Jewish and Israeli leaders

THE LAND OF ISRAEL WAS THE BIRTHPLACE OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE

"There is one place in the world to which we never flee or immigrate, but to which we come home: the Land of Israel"

Hanna Szenes

*"My heart is in the east, and I in the uttermost west—
How can I find savor in food? How shall it be sweet to me?
How shall I render my vows and my bonds, while yet
Zion lies beneath the fetter of Edom, and I in Arab chains?"*

R. Judah Halevy (trans. Nina Salaman)

EQUAL SOCIAL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS

It will ensure complete equality of social and political rights to all its inhabitants irrespective of religion, race or sex; it will guarantee freedom of religion, conscience, language, education and culture

"If we had a Jewish majority in the country, the first thing we would do here is to establish a situation of total, absolute, and complete equality of rights, with no exceptions whatsoever: whether Jew or Arab, [...] there is no difference before the law."

Ze'ev Jabotinsky

THE UNITED NATIONS CHARTER

It will be faithful to the principles of the United Nations Charter

"I believe, too, that there is nothing in our movement that allows room for the assumption that we ostensibly desire foolishly to be arrogant or to separate ourselves in a hostile manner from the rest of civilized humanity. On the contrary, we have always clearly emphasized that we see our future existence as based on the unity of all peoples and that we want to work towards this unity. It follows that the Zionist idea does not reject the humane concepts of love for all humankind; it includes them."

Benjamin Ze'ev Herzl

FREEDOM, JUSTICE, AND PEACE

It will be based on freedom, justice and peace as envisaged by the prophets of Israel

"We will set this on our hearts and purge ourselves of the demon of denunciation and division, as well as the hatred of the Torah and its laws, and clothe ourselves in the attribute of supreme and faithful love that the Torah enjoined us to display for all our brethren who are among us, as is written: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself; I am the Lord." (Lev. 19:18). And with this same attribute we will also love the stranger in our midst, as is written: "The stranger who resides with you shall be to you as one of your citizens; you shall love him as yourself, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt: "I am the Lord your God" (Lev. 19:34)."

Rabbi Ben-Zion Meir Hai Uziel

OUR NATURAL AND HISTORIC RIGHT

By virtue of our natural and historic right ... [we] hereby declare the establishment of a Jewish state in Eretz-Israel

"The Jewish nation is not only a national and political unit; it embodies a spiritual-ethical will and has carried a historical vision ever since it appeared on the stage of history."

David Ben-Gurion

THE INGATHERING OF THE EXILES

The State of Israel will be open for Jewish immigration and for the Ingathering of the Exiles

"Each and every one of us who had the privilege of being present at this event...cannot avoid sensing the unity of the Jewish people and the indestructible link between the reborn State of Israel and the People of Israel."

Golda Meir

FULL AND EQUAL CITIZENSHIP

We appeal—in the very midst of the onslaught launched against us now for months—to the Arab inhabitants of the State of Israel to preserve peace and participate in the upbuilding of the State on the basis of full and equal citizenship

"Fate has decreed that the two peoples live here together. That being the case, we must transform this decree into constructive, fruitful, and productive coexistence."

Yitzhak Navon

"It is possible for us to live together and coexist, despite everything, despite all the history."

Emile Habibi

THE CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY

...until the establishment of the elected, regular authorities of the State, in accordance with the Constitution which shall be adopted by the Elected Constituent Assembly

"The day will come that our people elects a government that will keep the first promise that was made to the people when the state was born; namely, the election of a constituent assembly whose principal task, in every country that has been reborn, is to grant the people a constitution that guarantees the liberty of the citizen and the liberty of the entire people."

Menachem Begin
